- First of all, joining the national service depend on a person's priorities.
- On the other hand, many might argue that most women are still physically weaker than men.
- "Both men and women should go through national service." Do you agree?
- Many women who were previously hesitant about going through the national service are now in a better position due to the incentives available.
- Women have proven themselves capable of undertaking a myriad of physically demanding jobs so national service should not daunt them.
- If the person does not have the burden of taking care of his family, then he is free to go through national service as long he is able to support himself.
- Secondly, if national service is viewed as just another aspect of society, then women should go through it as they will be capable of and expected to do it.
- Women should not be depending on the men to protect them to fight for the country. They should learn to bear arms and be part of the defense force themselves.
- However, we must not deny the benefits of having women defending our nation.
- In such situations, it can be difficult to depend on just men to defend the country.
- To begin with, since national service involves the defense of the nation, everyone has a role to play in defending the country.
- Secondly, when women obtains what they want, it will definitely be at the expense of men.
- Going through national service requires a lot of physical stamina that not every woman has and this in itself is a valid obstacle for women to be kept out of national service.
