

Name: _____

- On the other hand, many critics argue that educated women might eventually destroy the economy as men will simply rely on women and stop being productive.
- To begin with, educated women are better able to nurture their children.
- No women can really develop unless its women are educated. Do you agree?
- For example in Japan, female graduates drop out of the workforce after tying the knot to fulfill their maternal obligations. This not only is a major hindrance to economic development, but also a waste of resources.
- Educated women contribute stupendously to the size, quality and productivity of the workforce.
- Singapore has always put great emphasis on education. The success of the education system is seen in the the number of women from all over the world applying for a place in the schools, which in turn enables them to take leadership positions in leading companies.
- To begin with, educating women enables them to mingle and interact; thereby developing the social skills necessary to help develop a nation.
- In today's increasingly developed and egalitarian world, we can still see instances where women are denied the right to an education. This has led to numerous feminists to condemn such societies as being unable to really develop.
- In addition, educated women benefit the economy, allowing a country to develop fully.
- However, mindsets do change. In the wake of the silver tsunami occurring throughout the developed world, countries are compelled to harness the full potential of their citizens.
- On the other hand, many critics argue that even with education, biased attitudes against women hinders the development of the country.
- Educated women can instil in their young charges the mechanics of language, enabling them to comprehend subsequent knowledge.